

Don't Miss Your Court Date

Tennessee Courts have been impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic.

But you must attend your Order of Protection hearing unless you are 100% certain that the Court has rescheduled it for a future date. Remember the following:

- Tennessee courts are open. If the clerk's offices close, you will be able to call, email, or fax during regular business hours.
- If you have any questions about your hearing date, please contact the clerk's office at the courthouse where your hearing will be held.
- Tennessee courts are having in-person hearings for order of protection and other abuse cases—even if they are not in other types of cases.
- If the Court tells you that your Order of Protection hearing has been rescheduled, your temporary Order of Protection will stay in place until the hearing—if you have a temporary order of protection.
- If you have an Order of Protection or temporary restraining order that will end between 3/15/20 and 5/5/20, it will stay in place until 5/6/20.
- If you have an Order of Protection or temporary restraining order that will end between 3/15/20 and 5/5/20, it will stay in place until 5/6/20.
- If you have a hearing, you may bring your lawyer and witnesses. Nobody else will be allowed to go to the courthouse with you.
- The judge and their staff will tell you how to stay safe through social distancing when you arrive at court.
- If you lose your Order of Protection hearing and want to file an appeal, you should do so ASAP—even if the deadline to file it has been extended.
